1. As a result of the United Nations session on Palestine and the negative Russian attitude, Egyptian political circles are believed to be pessimistic concerning the submission of the Anglo-Egyptian dispute to the U.N. The Assistant Secretary General of the Wafd, Mahmud Sulayman Ghannam, is reported to have declared that the outcome of the U.N. session on Palestine is a sure indication of a solution for Egypt, and that he expected the U.N. to decide that the Bevin-Sidqi Agreement demonstrated British fairness and that the Anglo-Egyptian dispute is outside the sphere of the U.N. These political circles believe that Egypt would be advised to undertake further negotiations with Great Britain.
2. Ahmad Ramsi Bey, Egyptian Liberal senator and member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, is stated to have declared that the Arab failure at the U.N. Palestine sessions is proof that the U.N. is under British influence.
